Obligation of Federal Funding

An obligation is the legal commitment of the federal government to pay the federal share of a project's eligible cost. This commitment occurs when the Federal Highway Administration or Federal Transit Administration approves the project in the federal system and executes a project agreement. This process obligates funds to the specific project and activities and earmarks them for future reimbursement. Obligated funds are considered 'used' even though no cash is transferred at the time of the agreement.

Funding for many federal programs terminates at the end of the fiscal year for which it is appropriated. Federal-aid transportation funds, in contrast, are typically available for obligation for more than one year. When a federal agency makes a new apportionment or allocation for an ongoing program, it adds that amount to the program's unused balance from previous years. If, in an authorization act, Congress chooses to discontinue a program, any unused balance continues to be available for the period of availability that originally applied to the discontinued program.

Some types of funds—known as no-year or indefinite funds—are available until they are expended. However, as specified in law, under most of the major Federal-aid transportation programs, funds are available for obligation for a period of three years after the last day of the fiscal year for which the funds are authorized; thus, they are available for obligation for four years. For example, fiscal year (FY) 2025 Federal-aid highway funds that FHWA apportioned on October 1, 2023, are available for obligation until September 30, 2017. Note that outlays (expenditures) associated with timely-obligated funds may occur beyond the four-year obligation period.

This report lists the federal funding obligations that have been executed between FHWA, FTA, the Texas Department of Transportation, and designated Transit Providers in the region for Fiscal Year 2023.

Highway Project Listings

Highway project listings include projects funded through the Federal Highway Administration (FHWA) and have executed obligations agreements. Project listings reflect new federal funding authorization agreements and funding obligations or modifications to existing agreements.
